MUSIC SUPPLEMENT FOR LUTEZINES TO LUTE NEWS 159 (OCTOBER 2026): LUTE SETTINGS OF MUSIC PUBLISHED BY VALENTIN HAUSSMANN - AND ANOTHER BOURÉE

ANOTHER BOURRÉE

The lute settings of three distinct popular Boureée (B1-3) were included in LN/LZ132 and I since realised that another (B4) begins with a distinct A strain but shares the B strain of B1. Three of them were included as variants of B1 in LZ132 and are repeated here together with two more lute sources and two transcriptions, from Playford's The Dancing Master 1552 with the title Parsons Farewell and Praetorius' Terpsichore 1612.

VALENTIN HAUSSMANN

Valentin Haussmann (*c*1560-<1613) was a German composer, music editor, musician and poet. He lived most of his life in Gerbstedt, 50 km west of Leipzig, where he was probably organist but he travelled extensively throughout his life. He composed or arranged mainly secular music including German lied, dances, canzonettas and madrigals and his his texted works were suited to performance with voices alone, instruments alone or the two combined. The melodies he composed were borrowed by Melchior Franck, Sweelinck and Scheidt. He also arranged a lots of current popular music from Italy[1] and England and in the years 1598-9 he spent long periods in Prussia and northern Poland collecting Polish dances. All these were edited and published with or without texts in two huge collections, Venusgarten 1602 and Rest von Polnischen und andern Täntzen 1603 as well as many other prints published in Nuremberg by his friend Paul Kauffmann, frequently reprinted suggesting that his music was popular in his own lifetime.

This supplement collects together seventy lute settings related to texted music that Haussman set to German texts and published but it was often difficult to decide which are his compositions and which his arrangements of existing popular music although it is usually clear when he texted existing music titled as Polish dances in other sources,[2] or known from Italian and English originals that predate his prints. Not included here are the instrumental settings of English music by Dowland and others.[3] Some lute sources also include the text to Lied in Haussmann's prints with or without a mensural melody but no lute tablature.[4]

Some are ascribed by name or initials. There is however a recent catalogue of his music that includes incipits of the melodies as well as a few lute cognates,[5] that was invaluable for identifying whether lute solos with the same titles as used by Haussmann were based on the same melodies. But I could not find any modern editions for comparison to determine whether the harmony of the lute solos match Haussmann's settings. One or a few of each are included here as well as a list of other cognates for lute, and some for other instruments. The music is grouped according to the prints of Haussmann's in which they are found - they are found in ten of his prints published between 1592 and 1609. Most are attractive and easy to play but the ten settings in Johann Rude's Florum Musicae of 1600 are awkward intabulations but included here for completeness.

H44 is a setting of the melody Dowland set as 'Fortune my foe' and Haussmann set to the words 'Von der Fortune werd ich getrieben umb' [I am driven by fortune]. Of the nearly fifty sources of fortune, the lute settings listed below all use Haussmann's title.
