

MUSIC SUPPLEMENT TO LUTE NEWS 154 (JULY 2025): LUTE MUSIC ASCRIBED TO LORENZO ALLEGRI, ANDREA FALCONIERI, GUISEPPE BAGLIONO AND STEFANO DA PESARO

The theme of this supplement is music by early seventeenth century lutenists working for the courts of Italian states - possibly all acquainted: Lorenzo Allegri (1567-1648) employed in Florence, Andrea Falconieri (1585-1656) a career around Italy starting in Parma and ending in Naples, Guiseppe Baglione in Rome and Stefano da Pesaro in Urbino. They were contemporary with the now better known Giovanni Girolamo/ Johann Hieronymus Kapsberger (c.1580-1651) in Rome and Alessandro Piccinini (1566-1638) in Bologna and Ferrara, as well as the Italian lutenists working abroad such as Michelangelo Galilei (1575-1631) for Maximilian Duke and then Elector of Bavaria (r.1597-1651) in Munich¹ and Pietro Paulo Melii (1579->1625) for Holy Roman Emperors Matthias (r.1612-1619) and Fernando II (r.1619-1637) in Vienna.² These are all the celebrated lutenists of the next generation of Italians after the Roman lutenists Lorenzino Tracetti (d.1590) and Vincenzo Pinti (d.1608 in the house of his patron Cardinal Montalto³ - see App 9 below)⁴ as well as Santino Garsi in Parma (d.1604).⁵ The music for archlute here can be played satisfactorily on lutes with fewer courses if the bass notes are replaced with notes an octave higher - incidentally my favourite here of this style/period is the corrente AF3 (13).

LORENZO ALLEGRI

Lorenzo Allegri (1567-1648) was born in Florence in 1567, although the Medici court diarist Cesare Tinghi refers to the young Allegri as 'Lorenzino tedesco' suggesting he was of German descent. He is recorded as a salaried musician at the Medici court in Florence from 1604, so when he was in his mid-thirties, and seems to have remained there until decades later in 1636/7 getting the job of maestro di liuto to the Grand Duke of Tuscany (Ferdinando II (r.1621-1670)), and he composed and directed the instrumental music for the court entertainments throughout his working life dying in Florence in his eighties in 1648.⁶ So he presumably met Michelangelo Galilei who is recorded in Florence, his family's home, in 1606. Allegri published Primo libro delle musiche (Venice, Gardano 1618) comprising a collection of the dance suites of the music from the Medici court entertainments arranged for instrumental ensemble.⁷ Also a manuscript in Nürnberg (D-Ngm 33748/IV, ff. 3r-8v) preserves a vocal monody Musicha di L. A. Il Testamento di Tirsi del Marino.⁸

His surviving music for archlute using up to eleven courses is found in another two related manuscripts of Florentine provenance in Nürnberg and amounts to six items securely attributed to him - only three (LA1/3/6) bear his initials, but the others form suites with the ascribed pieces (LA1/2 and LA3/4/5) and are adjacent in the sources so are all assumed to be by him. In fact, LA3/4/5 are also concordant with the suite Primo Ballo della Notte d'Amore in his Primo libro delle musiche and based on music he composed in 1608 for the marriage of Cosimo II de Medici (the year before he became Grand Duke of Tuscany (r.1609-1621)) and Archduchess Maria Maddalena of Austria (1589-1631, as the titles of LA3ab describe.⁹ In addition, similar but anonymous music for lute in the same two manuscripts may also be by him or his circle in Florence, as well as in other manuscripts including I-Fn Magl.XIX.106 and I-Rvat 570 all sharing provenance and copyist, who could be Allegri himself - some included in the appendices below (App 2-8) and more in the accompanying Lutezine. If these are by Allegri then the many concordances in other sources (such as the sixteen sources for App 4) suggests Allegri's music was celebrated widely in Europe, although his name was not necessarily associated with it as none of the other sources are ascribed.

ANDREA FALCONIERI

Andrea Falconieri was born in Naples c.1585 and spent his childhood in Parma, possibly under the care of members of the Farnese family, who were the Dukes of Parma - Alessandro r.1586-1592 then Ranuccio I r.1592-1622? and he was probably taught the lute by Santino Garsi da Parma (1542-1604) who was the Farnese court lutenist until his death in 1604, when Falconieri replaced him remaining in post until 1614 when he departed the court suddenly for Mantua for reasons not now known. He is recorded in Florence where he was employed by Antonio de' Medici (son of the Francesco I, Grand Duke of Tuscany) as a lutenist and diplomat, the role taking him to Vienna where he applied unsuccessfully for a post with Ferdinand II (1578-1637) Holy Roman Emperor from 1619, and he would surely have met Pietro Paulo Melii who was court lutenist there 1612-1620. Around 1620 he was employed as a theorbo and guitar player in Modena, presumably at the court of Cesare d'Este (1597-1628). He returned to Florence after 1621 and is recorded performing at the wedding of Princess Margherita de Medici (1612-1679) and Odoardo Farnese Duke of Parma (r.1622-1646) in 1628. The Medici's lutenist Lorenzo Allegri would presumably have been performing at the same event. Then Falconieri was employed as theorbo and archlute player back in Parma in 1629. He moved again as he is recorded as a music teacher in Genoa 1632 -1637 before taking up employment as lutenist to the royal chapel in Naples in 1639 when Philip III of Spain (r.1621-1665) was governor of Naples. A decade later Falconieri became maestro di capella so from 1647 until he died from plague in 1656.¹¹

Falconieri published two music books Libro primo di Villanelle a 1. 2. & 3. voci. Con L'alfabeto per la chitarra spagnola (Rome 1616)¹² for voices and guitar and Il primo libro di canzone, sinfonie, fantasie, capricci, brandi, correnti, gagliarde, alemane, volte (Naples 1650),¹³ for instrumental ensemble. In addition around two dozen lute solos thought to be by him are found in two manuscripts: the lute book of his pupil Giuseppe Antonio Doni (I-PEas w.s.) copied 1620-

1640 (AF1/2/5/6) and I-PEsc b.10 copied 1616-1630 (AF3/4/7) which include seven that are ascribed (here) and another eighteen assumed to be by him (in the Lutezine). An untitled toccata?, three correntes (one titled gagliarda), two gagliarde and three variations on the passamezzo moderno ground,¹⁴ are for archlute of up to twelve courses, except the gagliarda AF4 is for chitarrone in re-entrant tuning and although ascribed to Falconieri but is an exact concordance for a gagliarda published by Kapsberger in his Libro Primo D'Intavolatura di Chitarone (Venetia 1604), so probably ascribed to Falconieri in error: a simplified setting of the first strain and division are in a third source. also in F-Pn Vmd.30 dated 1626.

The first page of the Doni manuscript begins with a barely legible title 'Aprile [?] de dep: Andrea falc [?] di ala [?]' crossed out and replaced with 'Libro di Leuto di Gioseppo Antonio Doni' and page 3, the first page of tablature, is headed 'Suonate del Falconieri' without indicating how many of the following pieces it refers to. However, a run of twenty pieces occupies pp. 3-31 in one hand, to which a later second hand has added shorter pieces and fragmentary passages in the intervening spaces continuing to fill the next four pages (32-35). This suggests that the twenty pieces in the first hand are the 'Suonate del Falconieri' and hence all composed by him: all are anonymous except the last is ascribed 'del Falconieri', so the first and last are included here as AF6 and AF1 respectively, and the others will in the Lutezine.

GUISEPPE BAGLIONI

The heading Composizioni del S[igno]r[e] Guiseppe Baglioni on p. 56 of the Doni manuscript probably refers to all the tablature from there up to p. 67 which is followed by a page of blank staves and then an untitled capriccio identified from Pietro Paulo Melli's Libro Quarto of 1614. This section of the Doni manuscript includes nine untitled solos for an archlute with up to fourteen courses, two of which look like correntes and the remaining seven like toccatas, passaggi or similar free form pieces some with passages resembling toccatas by Kapsberger.¹⁵ No other music by a composer of this name is known.

In the mid-seventeenth century memoirs of George Kraus, a Giuseppe/Josepho Baglioni is recorded as a musician for the Barberini family in Rome, as an exceptionally well paid lutenist to Maffeo Vincenzo Barberini (1568-1644) who became Pope Urban VIII in 1623. Kapsberger was also employed by the Barberini family as lutenist to Cardinal Francesco Barberini and performing for Cardinal Antonio Barberini as well as Pope Urban VIII, so would have worked alongside Guiseppe Baglioni. 'Guiseppe' is also recorded in a list of musicians who performed at the Oratorio del Santissimo Crocifisso, meeting place of a confraternity of the rich in Rome, and he may have been related to a lutenist named Bacchio Baglioni recorded in Florence.¹⁶

APPENDIX

The additional music here includes the only surviving lute solo of the otherwise unknown composer Stefano da Pesaro, former musician to the duke of Urbino - presumably the last duke, Francesco Maria II della Rovere (1549-1631) - according to the title in Besard's Novus Partus, as well as eight anonymous correntes found in Italian and other sources and possibly of Italian origin assuming courante francese in some titles means in French style rather than of French provenance. Five bear titles Bramata, Fioreta, L'onesta, Orsina and Stella, all found in one or more of manuscripts thought to be in the hand of Lorenzo Allegri, as well as multiple other sources. Two more anonymous correntes, for 12-c archlute and titled Farina and Zingara, are copied in French tablature at the end of the Aegidius Berner von Rettenwert lute book (CZ-Pnm IV.G.18) and related in style to the first five and so may also be by Allegri or one of his circle.¹⁷ App 9 is titled Cardinal Montalto's favourite in one of the thirteen sources referring to Alessandro Peretti (1571-1623), Cardinal Montalto, an extravagant patron of music and theatre in Rome and great nephew of Pope Sixtus V (1521-1590).
