

MUSIC SUPPLEMENT TO THE LUTEZINE TO LUTE NEWS 154 (AUGUST 2025): MORE LUTE MUSIC BY ANDREA FALCONIERI AND DOUBTFUL ATTRIBUTIONS TO LORENZO ALLEGRI PLUS SIMILAR MUSIC

ANDREA FALCONIERI - CONTINUED

The tablature supplement to the accompanying Lute News included music ascribed to the lutenist Andrea Falconieri (1585-1656) employed first as Farnese court lutenist in Parma then after brief periods in a variety of Italian cities finally settled down for nearly twenty years as maestro di capella at the court of the Spanish governor in Naples. The first page of the manuscript of his pupil Giuseppe Antonio Doni bears the heading 'Suonate del Falconieri' probably indicating that the run of twenty pieces in one hand on pages 3-31 are all by Falconieri. The first and last were in Lute News and the remainder are included here - half of which have been recorded.¹ They are unique to the Doni manuscript apart from three items: AF15 is also found ascribed to Donino Garsi² probably in error, in the manuscript (c.1620) of Stanislaw Kazimierz Rudomina Dusiacki; AF18 is in an early seventeenth century Italian manuscript owned by Arnold Dolmetsch now in Cambridge University library as well as in one of the Albani manuscripts discovered recently in Urbino; and AF20 is found in the same Albani manuscript. After finishing the supplements I noticed that an Italian lute manuscript has recently been discovered in Genova by Marinella di Fazio: the contents include eight more lute solos (five toccatas and three correntes) ascribed A.F. (presumably Falconieri) too late to be included here but it is hoped that an addendum of them can be included in a future supplement.³

LORENZO ALLEGRI - DOUBTFUL/RELATED⁵

The Lute News supplement also included the few items ascribed to Lorenzo Allegri (1567-1648) who spent his entire career from 1604 until he died at the Medici court in Florence. He was court lutenist as well as composer and director of the instrumental music for the court entertainments. In addition to the ascribed music, a few dozen anonymous lute solos or consort parts for bass lute presumed to be from the Florentine court entertainment for the wedding of Cosimo II de Medici in 1608 for which Allegri composed the music, are preserved in two manuscripts of Florentine provenance and probably copied in his own hand.⁶ The manuscripts are now in Nürnberg - D-Ngm 33748 II (24 items) & III (27 items) - and the same hand also copied all or part of two other Florentine manuscripts with overlap of contents with the Nürnberg manuscripts: I-Fn Magl.XIX.106 (28 items) and I-Rvat 570 (32 items).⁷ So examples of music from these manuscripts⁸ are reproduced here together with the many concordant sources of some of them⁹ in a series numbered 1 to 17 (and shorter sources of each of nos. 4-8 were in the accompanying Lute News supplement). The series comprises ten correntes¹⁰ as well as settings of popular grounds and dances and a long prelude to accompany a staged battle.

Whether by Allegri or not the seventeen anonymous items here, especially the correntes, seem to be characteristic of lute music in Italy in the early seventeenth century and I presume they were composed in Italy on French models (hence often titled Corrente Francese) rather than having been transmitted from France to Italy - although this is the case in other examples. The majority of the sources are in Italian tablature (34), with some in French (10) or German (1) tablature¹¹ - all transcribed into French tablature here - suggesting that this music was composed in Italy by Allegri, Falconieri and others and then transmitted without the composers named attached widely around Northern Europe including England in French tablature transcriptions.¹² It is noteworthy that transcription often involves reduction in the number of courses so that 14-course archlute music is adapted for 7-10 course lutes. The inclusion here of tablature for all the sources aids selection of the most accurate and complete versions (i.e. with divisions) to play for the lute of your choice (6-14 courses) as well as facilitating comparisons to establish stemmatic relationships between sources (not attempted here). This series ends with settings of a battaglia presumably to accompany a staged reenactment of a battle - the long and monotonous part for a lute (or several lutes playing in unison?) was presumably accompanied by a band and the tablature is annotated with entries for some of the instruments - while playing this just imagine the spectacle of noise and theatrical commotion it was accompanying!

APPENDIX

The appendices comprise page fillers of a thirteen items related to the above - another eight settings of the Tordiglione (App1a-h) quite distinct from those of 2a-h above, as well as a canzonetta by Marco Antonio Balletz (App3)¹⁵ and a corruptly copied (and partially reconstructed) corrente by Giacomo Basenza (App4), the only music ascribed to these otherwise unknown composers.¹⁶ The remaining items (App5-13) are a gagliarda (App2) similar to AF17 and nine correntes similar in style to the music of Allegri and Falconieri, including one associated with Cardinal Montalto (App9a-k here and App 9 in Lute News), who lent his musicians to the Medici for the celebrations for the wedding of Cosimo II de Medici in 1608. All eleven additional sources (9a-k) are included illustrating its popularity and transmission around Europe as well as the range of variant titles (corrente/volta/balletto/brandle), figuration/divisions and number of diapasons. The other eight correntes are from ten of the same sources as the above and twelve others.
