

MUSIC SUPPLEMENT TO LUTE NEWS 153 (APRIL 2025): MANUSCRIPT SOURCES OF MUSIC ASCRIBED TO JEAN BAPTISTE BESARD (c.1567->1616) part I - PLUS THE FLYING HORSE & MY HEART IS SURELY SET

JEAN/JOHANN/GIOVANNI BAPTISTE BESARD

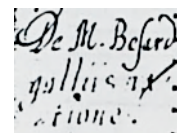

The French gentleman, lawyer, physician and lutenist Jean Baptiste Besard worked in Germany where he published two anthologies of lute music that included nearly five hundred works, over half anonymous and the rest with the names of their composers added.¹ Besard composed or arranged a lot of music himself going by the seventy or so pieces bearing his name or initials in his prints and half a dozen manuscripts. A volume of the CNRS series Corpus Des Luthistes Français published in 1981 was devoted to the music ascribed to him,² and included forty-five complete lute solos from Thesaurus Harmonicus and eleven from Novus Partus as well as twenty-four ascribed to him in five manuscripts, eleven of which were reproduced only as short incipits presumably because the original sources are corrupt and the editors did not attempt reconstruction. The music ascribed to him in other sources is mostly also found in his prints, but sixteen unica are not in his prints (plus n° 13 ascribed Be(sard) and anonymous in Thesaurus Harmonicus), edited here including attempts at reconstruction of the eleven CNRS incipit-only items.³ The remaining music ascribed to him will be edited for a later supplement or two.

On the title pages of his two prints Besard refers to himself as Joannem Baptistam Besardum Vesontinum (1603) and Ioan. Bapt. Besardi Vesontini (1617) indicating that he came from Besançon (latin: Vesontio), in the Franche-Comté region of France near the Swiss border. He also affirmed that he was French in the title Gaillarde De M. Besard gallus natione to a lute solo in a section of a manuscript he copied in his own hand (n° 7 and see image above right and details below). His birth is not recorded although his father owned property north of Besançon in Fussey and the lutenist's presence in Besançon at different stages in his life is documented.⁴ His educational achievements included matriculation with a double degree in Ecclesiastical and Civil Law at the nearby University of Dôle in 1587, probably around the age of twenty suggesting he was born c.1567. Also, a Johannes Baptista Besardus Bisontinus Gallus appears on the matriculation register of Heidelberg University for 1592 indicating that he may have continued his studies there. This was probably after a sojourn of a few years in Rome,⁵ where he claimed that he had lute lessons with Laurencini in the preface to Thesaurus Harmonicus ('hic Diuvinus ille artifex Laurencinus Romanus instructor quondam meus') so before 1590 when Laurencino/Lorenzino Tracetti died.⁶ In 1597 Besard visited Moritz Landgrave of Hesse in Kassel long enough to give lute lessons. Later that year he moved to Köln when he was in his 30s and where met the art dealer and diplomat Philipp Hainhofer who was about 19. Besard published his first anthology, Thesaurus Harmonicus, there in 1603. In a note dated 1617 Hainhofer said he was a student of Besard's,⁷ one of the twenty he had in Köln. In 1602 Besard married Péronne Jaquot, daughter of a noble Besançon family, but no children by them are recorded nor any indication that she accompanied him during his working life in Germany. They may have been estranged as she took legal steps to secure her finances and hence independence from him. In 1604 Besard edited volume five of the series of European treatises and international legal documents Mercurii Gallobelgici voicing his regret in the preface about his long absence from Besançon. He moved to Augsburg between 1604 and 1617 when Hainhofer lived there and apparently continued his professions of law and medicine also teaching the lute and publishing his dictionary of diseases and their cures, Antrum Philosophicum.⁸ Besard father died in 1613 from whom he inherited noble status. He is not heard of again after the publication of Novus Partus in Augsburg in 1617 when he would have been about 60 (see the portrait above left by Lucas Kilian from Novus Partus 1617) and it is not known when and where he died.

The music ascribed to Besard here is found in three sources, two of them with direct links to Besard: thirteen items are in the lute books copied by Philip Hainhofer in 1603 (D-W Guelf 18.7 & 18.8). Another three are in a lute book presumed to have been owned by a student of Besard's in Köln (PL-Kj 40143) of which folios 23v-50v, headed commance Le: 12 de Octobre 1600, was copied by Besard himself in untidy and often inaccurate tablature with sparing use of bar lines and rhythm signs.⁹ The remaining two are in the lute book of Emanuel Würstisen (CH-Bu F.IX.70 copied in Basel over many years from 1594) with no known connection with Besard. All three sources are problematic as the copying is corrupt with missing bar lines plus confused rhythm and figuration so although Besard's pupils have preserved an important part of his oeuvre in two of these sources but it is regrettable that they have left us such corrupt copies. In fact, the inaccuracies of notation throughout Hainhofer's lute books questions how well he could play the lute and led the nineteenth century lute scholar Wilhelm Tappert to comment disparagingly that 'The music betrays neither technical accomplishment nor good taste in its selection ... Musical standards in the home of this rich man must have been deplorable'.¹⁰

¹ Thesaurus Harmonicus published in Köln in 1603 (23 copies known, 3 online facsimiles at D-Mbs, F-Pn, PL-Kj) and Novus Partus sive Concertationes musicae published in Augsburg in 1617 (8 copies known, 3 online facsimiles at A-Wn, D-Mbs, US-Wc) - Julia Sutton 'The Music of J. B. Besard's Novus partus 1617' JAMS 19 (1966), pp. 182-204; Julia Sutton 'The Lute Instructions of Jean-Baptiste Besard' Musical Quarterly 51 (1965), pp. 345-362. Besard published three editions of instructions to lute playing which he says were based on the teaching of Laurencini 'De modo in testudine studiendi libellus' in 1603 at the end of Thesaurus Harmonicus, 'Ad artem testudini' at the end of Novus Partus in 1617 both in Latin and a German edition separately in 1617 as Isagoge in artem testudinariam and they were copied/adapted in other sources (see Carlone, fn 6).

Besard's compositions here include a range of genres, a toccata (n° 1); three preludes (n° 2/3/4) the first seemingly the most popular of his music with nine sources although only one ascribed; a deutsche dantz (n° 5); a pavana in triple time (n° 6); four galliards (n° 7/8/9/10) the first on the passamezzo antico ground (scale degrees i-VII-i-V-III-VII-i/V-I) and another attributed to the French composer Vausmesnil in one source and thought to be English in another; an Austrian chorea (n° 11); three French dances (n° 12/13/14) two of them volts one of which is titled Volte d. Be which could be an abbreviation of Besard but also attributed to J. P., probably Julien Perrichon. in Hainhofer's lute book.¹¹ The double attributions of n° 10/13) could be explained as Besard's arrangements of music by the French composers; a psalm setting titled The X Commandements (n° 15);¹² and two extended passomezzo-gagliarda pairs (n° 16 on the passamezzo antico ground and n° 17 on the passamezzo moderno (I-IV-I-V-I-IV-I/V-I). Although corrupt in places, n° 16 seems to capture something of Besard's virtuosity, especially in variation 6 and following which Hainhofer seems to have struggled copying down and surely could have been able to play, and may give us a glimpse of Besard's ability to improvise on standard Italian grounds. In contrast, passamezzo n° 17 and the gagliarde following both passomezzi are easier to play and might have better suited to Hainhofer into whose book they were copied. It is assumed here that an ascription to Besard at the beginning of the sets of variations means that he composed/arranged all the variations except those specifically ascribed to others (see fn 19), as well as the accompanying galliards.

THE FLYING HORSE & MY HEART IS SURELY SET

Here are lute solos based on a country dance and a ballad tune. A lute setting of three strains with divisions of the country dance Pegasus or the Flying-horse is found in the ML lute book copied c.1610-1615 (B1b). The same three strains are also set as a violin melody in the fourth edition of John Playford's The Dancing Master published in 1670. The violin melody has been transposed down a fifth and arranged for lute here (B1a) using the harmony from B1b. The two versions differ in phrase lengths in each section but are nevertheless closely related. The lute arrangement was copied over fifty years before Playford published the melody but the title is not quoted anywhere else and the tune is not otherwise known as far as I know.

The lute solo in Matthew Holmes' first lute book from the 1590s titled My Hart is surely sett (App 2c)²⁰ seems like a ballad tune, but I could not find any text or reference to it. However, an arrangement of the same tune is found in an untitled set of nine variations for lute in the Euing lute book copied c.1600. In addition, four lute solos with a similar tune are found in the Thysius lute book (NL-Lt 1666) copied by Adriaan Smout over a long period from the 1590s: three untitled and a pastiche of several settings titled La Gavotte - this and the other two settings not included here will be in the Lutezine.
